

Is the Albanians religion really Albanianism?: Religion and nation according to Muslim and Christian leaders in Albania (Albanische Forschungen)

For over a century, Albanians have been urged to view religious differences as unimportant. But are they? By conducting a unique set of interviews with representatives of the countrys high-ranking clerics, Cecile Endresen tries to answer this question. The clerics speak of an interplay between nation and religion in the their own symbolic universes and expound on such themes as salvation, religious tolerance, historical developments, theological differences, and politics. While embracing national unity and religious tolerance as an overriding ethos, they nonetheless manifest a certain religious rivalry and a sense of unjust treatment. As such, they appear to contradict their own claims; at the same time, they are proud to be Albanian and intent on upholding national unity. Their perception of what it means to be Albanian is invariably related to the question of religious differences and inter-religious relations. Endresens study investigates religion in multi-religious, post-atheist Albania by highlighting the fluidity and the extreme complexity of relations between nation and religion in Albania - compounded by the effects of global politics, local traditions, religious doctrine, personal experience, regional history, national myths, Communist propaganda, and conspiracy theories.
