

Scam Artists and Seniors: How to Protect Yourself and Those You Love From Investment Fraud

As we age we become choice prospects for scam artists who target seniors with fraudulent schemes. They sound so convincing over the phone, they seem like such nice people who have our best interests in mind, and the investment they're presenting appears quite promising. Sadly, having a good financial head on our shoulders isn't necessarily enough to prevent us from falling victim to investment fraud. It happens far more often than you may realize, and to those who you would least expect to fall prey to such things. Scam artists and the companies they work for continue to become more and more sophisticated, and the perpetrators continue to get better and better at what they do. This guide provides concrete steps for protecting yourself and those you love from ever falling victim to scam artists, as well as steps to take if you believe you have already been a victim of investment fraud. It provides you with contact information to investigate a company, a salesperson, and an investment offer, as well as instructions on reporting suspected fraud. You owe it to yourself to invest in a little reading before investing in anything else.
