

When the Dot-Com Boom Went Bust

The dot-com boom has been likened to a modern-day gold rush. In the late 1990s, the gold was e-business and there was a frenzy to cash in on it. Hopeful young entrepreneurs, backed by a seemingly endless supply of easy money from investors, founded an overflow of new Internet companies, which were often ill-planned. When many of those companies failed to make a profit, the money vanished, and the boom quickly went bust by 2000-2001. This e-single, featuring articles from the New York Times archives, chronicles the dot-com bust and its aftermath. Andrew Ross Sorkin writes about the demise of Boo.com, the fashion e-tailer that burned $185 million in 18 months; Reed Abelson gives the final chapter on Pets.com and its Sock Puppet; Hal R. Varian compares the boom with tulipmania; Matt Richtel and John Markoff report on Silicon Valley; and John Schwartz writes about the death of the dot-com dream and the sobering effect of the 9/11 terrorist attacks.

My curiosity got the best of me the other day and I gave in by watching one of those "End of the World" conspiracies videos. This time around the date is set for July 29, 2016. So in three days the biblical prophecies will come true and we will be swallowed up by hell fire while the others who are "saved" will rejoice in the heavens.
