

Ageing, Autonomy and Resources (Avebury Series in Philosophy)

This collection of articles, mostly by philosophers, but including two doctors and an economic historian, is intended as a contribution to applied ethics and medical ethics. The articles tackle two questions: how can the autonomy of the elderly be increased, and how can a just proportion of medical resources be secured for them? The seven articles dealing with the first question apply work in the theory of ethics on the nature and limits of autonomy to the particular case study of the elderly: there are a number of detailed conclusions about what can and should be done, and a general consensus that, while the right to die with dignity is important, even more important is the improvement of the quality of life. The seven articles dealing with resources examine the problems created by an ageing population and the arguments for discriminating against the elderly: the main conclusion is that none of these arguments are sound or convincing. Overall the book seeks to make both a theoretical and a practical contribution to this field.

My curiosity got the best of me the other day and I gave in by watching one of those "End of the World" conspiracies videos. This time around the date is set for July 29, 2016. So in three days the biblical prophecies will come true and we will be swallowed up by hell fire while the others who are "saved" will rejoice in the heavens.
