

Domestic Violence at the Margins: Readings on Race, Class, Gender, and Culture

This is a thoughtful and scholarly addition to the unfortunately scarce literature on domestic violence and oppression in all its forms. Jacquelyn C. Campbell, Anna D. Wolf Chair, Johns Hopkins University School of Nursing. An exciting and powerful collection that eloquently critiques some of the current thinking in domestic violence and raises key concerns for advocates and scholars working in the area. Sujata Warrier, president, board of directors, Manavi: An organization for South Asian women. Sokoloff has assembled an impressive array of authors who challenge us to think outside of our contemporary domestic violence box. Angela M. Moore Parmley, chief, violence and victimization research division, National Institute of Justice. This groundbreaking anthology reorients the field of domestic violence research by bringing long-overdue attention to the structural forms of oppression in communities marginalized by race, ethnicity, religion, sexuality, or social class. Reprints of the most influential recent work in the field as well as more than a dozen newly commissioned essays explore theoretical issues, current research, service provision, and activism among Latinos, African Americans, Asian Americans, Jewish Americans, and lesbians. The volume rejects simplistic analyses of the role of culture in domestic violence by elucidating the support systems available to battered women within different cultures, while at the same time addressing the distinct problems generated by that culture. Together, the essays pose a compelling challenge to stereotypical images of battered women that are racist, homophobic, and xenophobic. The most up-to-date and comprehensive picture of domestic violence available, this anthology is an essential text for courses in sociology, criminology, social work, and womens studies. Beyond the classroom, it provides critical information and resources for professionals working in domestic violence services, advocacy, social work, and law enforcement.
