Inspired by the The Big Challenge series that aired in 2007 on kids and obesity, and the Surgeon Generals report that advocates obesity is more prevalent and pervasive among Blacks and Hispanics; King presented a pedometer challenge to her granddaughter in 2008, who was 8 years old at the time. Notable results were observed. ? Her desire for outside activities increased immensely. ? Attempting to reach her daily goal of 12k steps became additive. ? The pedometer was viewed more as a game, than a tracking tool. King shares frankly concerning her and her families battle with obesity and the associated complications of Type II diabetics, heart disease, sleep apnea, kidney failure, and hypertension to name a few. As a writer, author, she tells her irrefutable testimony of how she attributes the aid of pedometer walking and alternative food selections to her being able to ward off Type II Diabetes thus far. In an eye opening and thought provoking approach; she highlights the impact of the church and its unconscious role on how it contributes toward the advancement of obesity. She also spotlights manufacturers in their supportive and not so supportive efforts. The church in a good conscious state cant be guilty of creating an opportunity and an environment for the very thing that they preach and teach against, [temptation.] I tussled with the idea of holding off publishing this book until Id attained my desired weight goal; I figured that it would be received or recognized as being a more effective or proven mechanism. You know... after the victory. Then I was reminded that its during the struggles of life is when encouragement, comfort, and strength is needed the most, whether youre the one thats receiving it or giving it.[Excerpt from Introduction.] Wonderfully illustrated in colorful photos of food, charts, graphs and alternative food recipes.
