

Take Back Your Money: A Survival Guide For The Next Recession, The One After That, and The One After That

Forbes.com contributor and veteran financial adviser John E. Girouard asks: Its your money, but who controls it? If youre like most Americans, he says, the answer is everyone but you. It wasnt always so. Until the 1970s, people who were planning for their golden years said they were saving for retirement, not investing for it. Theres a big difference and the Great Recession punished millions for forgetting that a bird in the handsaving is always worth more than two in the bushinvesting. So what do we do now? How can we get back control of our money? How can we avoid the same trap next time, since history teaches us there will always be another next time? Drawing on three decades as an investment adviser, Girouard challenges every popular assumption about saving and preserving money, because most are flawed. He explains in plain English how Wall Street persuaded millions to gamble on the future while failing to expect the unexpected, and how to avoid being caught in the same trap next time, because there will always be a next time. There will always be crashes, panics, disasters, meltdowns, and so on, yet we speak of them as anomalies. No matter how sophisticated the worlds financial markets become, and no matter how many regulations government imposes, there will always be a financial crisis in our future. Most lives are marked by a series of financial challenges and crisesbuying or selling a home, college tuition, supporting relatives in need, legal expenses, medical bills, unemployment, death, and so on. Yet few people plan their financial lives to be ready for crisis. Instead, they plan for success, often based on somebody elses estimate of future returns. When things fail to pan out, as they so often do, theyre left wondering, What do I do now? Girouards answer, with specifics, is to take back your money from the institutions that gambled with it and put it in investment vehicles that you control in institutions that are depositor owned.
